

My Vision for the Future of Coney Island

By: Samantha Ng

In the future, I imagine Coney Island to be filled with red and pink roses. I imagine orange lights on the beach to point to the sky. The sky would be filled with colorful fireworks or pyrotechnics at night. Pink sand would outline the rim of the beach like in Bermuda. Seashells and seaweed would outline the clean water.

Next to the beach would be a relaxing, clean, green park. There would be chirping birds, lilies, lilacs, oak trees, butterflies, water fountains, and dragonflies. Sometimes exercising classes would take place in the park. A tiny little diner would be in the park. Its food wouldn't be overpriced. The restaurant would have restrooms incase someone needs to use the bathroom or wash their hands.

There would be a storytelling event at the park during the night. Zoos would have plenty of animals. Which ever animal you're going to, you will see a 3-D model or diagram of the animal's habitat or environment. At the aquarium, they could make a tunnel or passageway that leads to a glass dome. The glass dome would allow us to get a closer look at the animal.

It would also allow us to study the animal. There would be a basketball court. A tennis court and a track field would be next to the basketball court. A block party would be held every summer. The streets would be safer for kids to play on. The streets would be smoother and safer for cars to be on.

There would be a local, free pool on every street, block, or neighborhood. More public schools would be opened. Teachers should get paid more frequently or get paid a greater amount because they give our children education and use their minds to think of new lectures. More hospitals should be built because some people don't have cars and get tired to walk very far and they might have a disease. That is my vision for the future of Coney Island.
